

Welcome to Restaurant Heemelrijck.

The family recipes you will find here have been developed since 1949 by Grandfather Nars. That same year, Nars opened Narco's Sandwich Shop on the Damrak, in honour of his deported best friend Cor. Before the war, these two friends were acrobatic dancers and owned a taxi company, despite not having driving licenses. Over the years, the sandwich shop grew into a restaurant and later into a Franco-Dutch bistro. All of this has led to the third generation continuing these traditions and recipes in the heart of Amsterdam: on the Singel, at the iconic Leidseplein and in the vibrant De Pijp district.

Nars and his friend Cor formed a street acrobat duo and performed impressive acts that attracted many visitors around town.

At the age of 18, Grandpa started his first job abroad, where he took care of the kitchen and gave sports lessons to passengers in his spare time. Later, he joined the Jewish sports club Maccabi, where he began wrestling and boxing under the guidance of "Ome Nelis" at gym Bisschop.

After opening his very first sandwich shop, Grandpa Nars was asked by an American journalist why the eggs tasted so delectable. "Come back tomorrow morning at 8 a.m. with your camera and you can capture the morning ritual of our chickens," he replied. A month later, this remarkable scene was published in the New York Times.

Since 1976, Narco's Sandwich Shop has been run by its second generation owners, who have transformed it into Amsterdam's first French-Dutch bistro. Traditional family recipes have been passed down from generation to generation, and at Heemelrijck we continue to uphold this culinary legacy to this day.
